To whom it may concern,

RE: David Bennett Recommendation

David has been instrumental in the development of our business over the last 2 years. He has guided the company to reforming standard practices and well as defined many policies and procedures that are and will be in use for years to come. He has implemented many new systems here at PCI including an Opportunity system to track incoming leads, as well as a Tech Support system to track all the incoming Tech Support phone calls and emails that we get on a daily basis. David's strategic and critical thinking was the catalyst that enabled our company to evaluate and modify our operations to run in a more organized and quantifiable way. These new procedures and standards he helped to impliment will most certainly pave the way for substantial growth in the future. It is a terrible loss to loose David due to these hard economic times and we are sorry to see him go.

David has been essential in managing the many custom database projects that PCI has implemented for many businesses across the United States. David had developed many tools and systems to provide critical project budget and timeline information to executives at PCI as well as the client project owners through PCI's internal systems and third party applications such as MS SharePoint. David is effective at communicating the complex ideas of databases to laymen clients in a way that is easy to understand. David was always fair in dealing with clients on issues and weighed the company's interests with the needs of the clients. This balance made him an effective project manager.

David was instrumental for one of our clients hired PCI to make a vertical market solution out of her database and to sell it on the open market. The many pieces involved in bringing a product to market is a very complicated project that David was able to execute as routinely as many other projects in his responsibility at the time. This product was successfully rolled out to the public and is now a solid revenue stream for the client.

David was an effective manger of the Database Services department. The employees he oversaw respected him and sought his guidance on many issues that concerned their employment with PCI. David was always fair in dealing with employees on issues and weighed the company's interests with the needs of the employee. This balance made him an effective department manager.

David will be an asset to any company that can utilize his strengths and capitalize on his effective business and project management skills.

Sincerely,

Keith Laroche
